For most of the first year of the pandemic, spending on research-related goods and services by participating universities fell below the same month in the previous year. But spending levels rebounded by January 2021, even surpassing the year before.
Overall, participating universities saw a decline in research-funded employment during the pandemic. The job losses were concentrated in the student and post-graduate researcher categories.